

ozello is a five-piece queercore band of punks from atlanta. with songs inspired by love, family, death, sexuality and aquatic animals, the group draws fans from all backgrounds and musical interests. their sound could be compared to that of Ghost Mice or Girls, and their use of trumpet and violin bring a folky twist that is both unique and eclectic.

all the way from the swamps of south georgia, frontman jeofry wages writes songs straight from his soul and brings a stage presence full of fish jokes, crop tops and hair flips. they like to jump around and yell about their feelings with the hope that they'll make someone feel something too. not only is ozello fun to watch on stage, but also the kind of people that'll share their stories with you while drinking malibu for hours. currently you can find ozello's recorded demos on soundcloud and bandcamp along with live show videos on youtube. the band hopes to have an album ready for release in early 2019.
